At The Foot Of The Cross

by Steve Higginbotham

To see, think, act, and feel as God does is the daily challenge of Christianity. We have a difficult time seeing things as God sees them, thinking as God thinks, acting as he would act, and feeling the same way God feels. You see, our perception is often skewed and needs adjustment. But how do we make those adjustments?

Go to the foot of the cross. At the foot of the cross, we all can clearly see:

- The enormity of sin.
- God's hatred for sin
- God's love for the sinner.
- The depravity of man.
- The redemption of man.

I believe it would do us well to periodically remind ourselves of these truths that are seen at the foot of the cross. If we could only learn to hate sin as much as God does and understand it's enormous consequences, I'm convinced we would live holier lives. Also, if we understood just how much God loves us in spite of ourselves, I'm also convinced we will be compelled to requite that love.

At the foot of the cross, it's easy to see as God sees. So maybe that's where we need to spend some time. Give it some thought.
